Dates: November 22 - December 05, 2013Blue is the warmest color was hands down the most talked about films at this year's Cannes Film Festival even before it won the prestigious Palme d'Or. Some attention, of course, was focused on his explicit and honest sex scenes involving two women, but it was the quality of the storytelling and the fearlessness of both actresses that kept buzzing. Since then, the film has been dogged by controversy over comments made about the ethics of production in the French press. If any or all of this means that you will come and watch this movie, then that's all that matters because it's a strong, unique and very moving story about love received and lost. Adale - a sensitive teenager whose life is turned upside down when she meets the mysterious, blue-haired Emma. Charming, confident and laily, she becomes the catalyst for Adale's sexual awakening. Two women begin a passionate, loving and intense long-term relationship that will last for years. The fact that they are a same-sex couple is just one of the challenges they face because they come from very different economic backgrounds and have very different interests. Eventually, cracks begin to develop into their happy existence, and when the relationship breaks down, it has a devastating effect on Adale, who has her heart broken for the first time. The plot may seem insignificant, but blue is the warmest color of anything but. Over three hours and spanning a decade in the lives of these two women, director Abdellatif Kechiche takes us on a mature, complex and layered journey. It's a deeply appealing film whose power comes from the performances - newcomer Adale Exarchopoulos and Lea Seydoux are both unusual. Unsurprisingly, when the Cannes jury announced its decision, for the first time in the history of the festival it was envisaged that the prize would be awarded not only to the film, but also to two actresses. Presented in a ratio of 2.38:1, coded with MPEG-4 AVC and provided 1080p transmission, Abdellatif Kechiche's Blue Is The Warmest Color arrives on Blu-ray courtesy of British distributors Artificial Eye.The high-definition transmission is not identical to the one criterion used for their Blu-ray of this award-winning film in the United States, but the foundation for it seems to be the same digital wizard that was produced by Eclair. Unsurprisingly, the film looks fantastic on Blu-ray.The numerous close-ups boast outstanding depth and sharpness, making it extremely easy to see even tiny pores and facial hair. Even the dark footage from the nightclubs impresses with stunning clarity. Contrast levels remain stable throughout the film. The colors are exceptionally rich, hard and very natural. There are no major anomalies in this review to report specific transmissions. When purged through a digital projector, the film also remains tight at the edges and impresses with a sleek but bright and very clean look. Overall, I think this wonderful Blue presentation is the warmest color that is guaranteed to please its fans. (Note: This is a region-B 'blocked' Blu-ray release. So you must have a home-B region or region-free PS3 or SA in order to access its contents). There are two standard sound tracks on this Blu-ray release: the French DTS-HD Master Audio 5.1 and the French LPCM 2.0. For the record, Artificial Eye provided the imposed English subtitles for the main function. (They can't be menu or remote control). The subtitles are displayed inside the frame of the image. Teh Teh has a very organic sound design. Different music videos are used during the selection of sequences, but the film does not have a prominent soundtrack. Different natural sounds and noises, however, are very easy to identify. Dialogue is always clear, clean, stable and easy to follow. The English translation is excellent. Trailer - The original British theatrical trailer for Blue is the warmest color. In French, with English subtitles imposed. (2 mins)... Remote scenes - three deleted/extended scenes. In French, with additional English subtitles. (9 mins)... Interview with Adele Exarchopoulos - In this new video interview, actress Adele Exarchopoulos discusses the casting process, Abdellatif Kechiche's directing methods, love sequences, filming (which lasted about five months, an unusually long period for French production) etc. in English, not with subtitles. (8 mins). Interview with Abdellatif Kechic - in this new video interview director Abdellatif Kechic explains how the blue color appeared, and discusses how the characters are portrayed in his films, the unique framing of the film, as well as the use of colors and light, the editing process (and, in particular, his work with several editors) etc. in French, with additional English subtitles.
